Harken To The Harvest Songs Gathering The Sheaves

The Whole Country Will Soon be Singing a Chorus of Prosperity, Stilling the Quarrels of Business and Politics, Silencing the Grumbles of Possimism.

"YOU'RE BLACK," shouts the Pot of Business to the Kettle of Politics. "So are you," cries Politics to Business in retort, "what you need is a bath of old-fashioned honesty." "And what you Politicians need is to purge yourselves of Hypocrisy," says Business.

While these two are bandying epithets, you and we, Consumers, Tax payers, Wage earners and small fry generally, are gritting our teeth because of the obstinacy of these belligerents who would rather have hard times if they cannot have their own way and say.

Ever since the Democrats came into power—and even before that, since their election in November of 1912—the professional Republican editors and spellbinders have been crying calamity and predicting "soup houses" and "panics."

Actually they would be glad to have disaster so that they could chestily declare: "We told you so."

We resent these dolorous preachments of hard times for partisan purposes merely. That is the hypocrisy of which Politics needs to be purged.

On the other hand the Democratic administration started out with a heavy plan of campaign, directed against special privileges enjoyed chiefly by Big Business.

It has taken a long time—an unconscionably long time—to carry thru this programme, and the job is not finished yet, tho the end is probably in sight within the next six weeks.

When the anti-trust legislation measures are enacted and put along with the completed business of currency law and new tariff, the whole country will breathe easier. Relief will be immediate.

Then crinination will cease their tumult, and we shall hear the merry songs of the harvest hands as they garner in the crops.

Never in all the world's history has the United States raised so much wheat as this year—nearly one billion bushels.

In corn, the estimated production is for a half-billion more bushels than last year. It is a banner year in all the cereals, and for cotton, hay, all the fruits, and every farm product that can be named.

This means thousands of millions of dollars to farmers and horticulturists of the United States and that we shall turn these food-stuffs into gold in the markets of the world.

You cannot get away from it. Prosperity hangs to us and will not be shaken off. We are not wasting treasure in war. We are employing every man who is willing and able to help in harvesting.

Within six weeks mercantile business will lose any feelings of depression that it may have or have had, and will not the activities responsive to the moving of the crops, the busying of the railroads, the call for more textile weavers, coal miners, steel workers, and other factory operatives.

California has been pluming itself for weeks on its early and heavy shipments of fruits and vegetables, and the crop estimates this year which are far in advance of other years. We have no failures in any line of production. Nothing but success wherever the hand of man has broken the crust of Mother Earth.

This garden land might be an Island of Optimism completely surrounded by pessimism, but it is likely soon to be merely a high-water mark of a rising tide of Prosperity.

The above article was clipped from a Los Angeles, California paper and mailed us by J. C. Adams, a Rockcastle boy who is gathering some of the rich harvests of that prosperous state.
